Abdul Hamid H.

Abdul Hamid II, the Sultan of Turkey, was born in 1842, and came into power in 1876, succeeding his brother. His will is absolute, when not contrary to the precepts of Koran. The state and church are allied, the Sultan having been, for many hundred years, the califf or acknowledged head of the church. The Sublime Porte is virtually the cabinet of the Sultan, consisting of the ministers of different departments, appointed by himself and individually responsible to him only. The Porte administers the government subject to the Sultan's will. Much is, therefore, bound up in the personality of the Turkish Sultan, and a new Sultan might give an altogether different aspect to the future of the Ottoman Empire.

Fine Manners At Home.

No one who has any appreciation of grace and beauty in nature or in art can fail to recognize the charm of fine manners in an individual. We rejoice in them as we do in a lovely sunset view, or a beautiful piece of architecture, or a fascinating poem, for their own sake and for what they express; but even beyond this they have another attraction in the magnetic power they exert upon all beholders in setting them at ease, in sweeping away shyness, awkwardness and restraint, and in stimulating them to the expression of whatever is best worth cherishing within them. It is undoubtedly true that the presence of fine manners, whether it be in the home or the social circle, in the workshop or the counting-room, in the visit of charity or the halls of legislation, has an immediate effect of reproducing itself, in diffusing happiness, in developing the faculties, and in eliciting the best that is in everybody. Many persons, recognizing this power and feeling this charm, desire greatly to possess it, and to this end they assume a mannerism that is as far removed from really fine manners as any other counterfeit is from the reality is imitates. Manners may be either a revealer or a concealer of the true mental or moral condition of a man. When adopted as a veil to hide what is there, however ingenious the artifice, the beauty and grace of truly fine manners cannot be reached. There will always be an indescribable something to dim their luster and cast suspicion on their verity. The bland courtesy which covers up dislike or indifference cannot command absolute trust; the gracious condescension which is often adopted to hide a mild contempt generally betrays it in the end. The finest manners are those which express, frankly and unconsciously, the actual presence of fine qualities in their most delicate shades. All mere imitations of them, where they do not exist—all artificial airs and graces for the sake of appearances are mere mannerisms, which soon become transparent and disclose what they are intended to hide. If fine manners require the expression of the good, they equally demand the repression of the evil. Anger, heat, exaggeration, violence, ill-nature, selfishness, are all foes to good manners. Self-control and self-respect will diminish them by forbidding them to vent themselves. Kept in subjection, they will subside; allowed free expression, they will become intolerable. The presence of good manners is nowhere more needed or more effective than in the household, and perhaps nowhere more rare. Wherever familiarity exists there is a tendency to lose the check upon selfish conduct which the presence of strangers involuntarily produces. Many persons who are kind and courteous in company are rude and careless with those whom they love best. Emerson says, "Good manners are made up of petty sacrifices," and certainly nothing can more thoroughly secure the harmony and peace of the family circle than the habit of making small sacrifices one for another. Children thus learn good manners in the best and most natural way, and habits thus acquired will never leave them. Courtesy and kindliness will never lose their power or their charm, and while all spurious imitations of them are to be despised, their real presence should be honored and cherished by all.—Ex.

The Next Eclipse.

The total eclipse of the sun on August 18, will be remarkable on account of the length of the land line traversed by the shadow of the moon. In fact it will be many years before another eclipse will occur the path of which will be so continuously upon the land and so little upon the ocean. The shadow of the moon will strike the earth first at Berlin, early in the morning. It will past eastwardly from this point and, traversing the entire width of Russia and Siberia, will reach the Sea of Japan a little south of Vladivostock. Trending southeastwrrdly the shadow track will pass across Hondo, the main island of Japan, in a line running from Niigata, upon the western coast, to Mito. The observers upon the streets of Tokio will be favored with a sight of the eclipse a little sonth of the line of totality. The giant shadow will rise and disappear from the surface of the earth at a point nearly 1,000 miles east of Japan in the Pacific Ocean.

The total phase of the eclipse is not as long as astronomers would wish. The longest total eclipse which has been observed during the present century occupied a period of nearly six minutes. This was in India, some twenty years ago. The total phase of the present eclipse will last about four minutes at Lake Baikal, the most favorable point, with the sun at maximum altitude; while at most of the observing stations at either end of the line the length of the total phase will occupy from three and a quarter to three and a half minutes.
